

Abstract of the Disclosure

A semiconductor device of the present invention has an active region whose width varies. Gate electrodes cross over narrowest portions of the active region. Therefore, the device is not prone to producing leakage current even when the line width of the gate electrodes is small.